Esther Sahay, The Canadian Press NEW YORK -- Lawmakers in New York have approved a bill that would allow non-U.S. citizens to be deported for visiting the country or making more than $10,000 in a year in purchases. Governor Andrew Cuomo is expected to sign the bill into law on Wednesday, although the Department of Homeland Security had been reviewing it. The bill applies to visitors and non-U.S. citizens if their purchases are more than $10,000 and $50,000 respectively. Several similar bills have been filed in other states, including Oregon and Illinois.

A comparison of endotoxin and bacterial lipopolysaccharide as a model of bacterial sepsis in rats. The utility of the bacterial pyrogen lipopolysaccharide (LPS) as an experimental model of sepsis has been questioned. The present study examined the ability of LPS to act as a septic agent in the rat. The survival time after various LPS doses was similar to that of Escherichia coli infection. A dose of 12 micrograms/g of body weight caused a marked increase in the serum levels of tumor necrosis factor-alpha, whereas those of interleukin-1, interleukin-6, and leukotriene B4 were significantly increased at much lower doses. The accumulation of exudate leukocytes and the development of hypothermia, marked edema, and acute circulatory failure were also observed at a dose of 12 micrograms/g of body weight. These changes induced by LPS were clearly ameliorated by prior administration of 40 mg/kg of BW of the endotoxin antagonist polymyxin B. This suggests that the circulatory failure observed in the LPS-induced inflammation is related to a cytokine cascade. However, higher doses of LPS induced a prolonged hypotension and significantly suppressed the accumulation of leukocytes in the peritoneal cavity and the lungs. Histopathologically, similar massive
